She added that soft skills are often described by using terms often associated with personality traits, such as optimism, common sense, responsibility, a sense of humor, integrity; and abilities that can be practiced such as empathy and emotional intelligence, teamwork, leadership, communication, negotiation, sociability, ability to give and gain feedback, creative thinking and learning agility. She said that from the broad range of soft skills, the communication / interaction skills play more important role and everyone should focus on this part of soft skills in their day to day functioning.
